Areas of Focus

As an interdisciplinary degree program, the Bachelor of Integrative Studies requires two or more different areas of focus consisting of at least 21 hours total. These areas can be grouped based on department, such as Psychology and Anthropology, or by concept such as Education and Cultural Studies. This is your opportunity to get creative and design your degree in a way that is meaningful to you and your career goals.

Each area of focus must have a minimum of nine credit hours and should outline the remaining classes (exclude core) that you will take to fulfill your graduation requirements. Often times upper level coursework will require lower level pre-requisites. If the upper division courses you have selected have any pre-requisite classes, include them in your list.
